

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 2016 — 03

Man questioned over fox carcass from Victoria

A FOX carcass found in the police. The department yesterday said a Tasmanian man had brought into Tasmania from Victoria, an investigation has found.

The investigation was done by the Department of Primary Industries, Parks, Water and Environment with help from probe. "As the legal process is continuing, no further comment will be made in relation to this matter," a statement said.

It is expected a man will be charged. The carcass was found on the Frankford Highway on October 30 and was reported by a motorist. Initial investigations confirmed the animal had been hit by a vehicle, but not where it was living before it was found.

Primary Industries Minister

Jeremy Rockliff urged all Tasmanians to take biosecurity seriously.

"I also thank the members of the public who found the carcass and reported it and also the members of the public who assisted with the investigation," he said.

PROBE: The fox carcass on the Frankford Highway.